<td>Once upon a time, there was a place that was so beautiful that time seemed to come to a halt. The place was called Endless Fields of Joy. Endless Fields of Joy was a wetland occupied by animals and various organisms. Endless Fields of Joy was a well-balanced ecosystem. However, little did these inhabitants know that their well-balanced way of life would soon be threatened?</td>
